Personal Statement Tips
The personal statement is the most important piece of your scholarship application. It is your vehicle to present to the selection committee who you are and why you would be a worthy scholarship recipient. Your personal statement is proof that you possess the communication and analytical skills necessary to be a successful student. The statement should be sincere, containing your views and values expressed in your own words. Your statement should convey your personality and sense of self.

Limit your statement to no more than two pages. Use correct grammar and writing structure. Spelling and neatness count. Don’t trust computer spell checkers—they can’t catch homonyms. Type your statement. Be positive. Be specific. Ask for help from family, friends, faculty, and staff. Get help proofing your statement.

Letters of Recommendation and Transcripts
Letters of recommendation and your school transcripts are used to corroborate the information you have provided in your personal statement. The transcript shows the results of your academic efforts, while your letters show how earnest you are about your goals and how you are a responsible student. Most scholarships require three letters of recommendation. Since you are applying for financial assistance for your education, you will make the best impression if you use letters written by people who have observed you in class - in other words, faculty members. You may use employer letters as long as they speak to how responsible you are as an employee. PLEASE NOTE: Faculty letters are stronger than letters from non-faculty.
